Since 2001, India's economy has grown at around 7% per year. In 2013, it was already the world's tenth largest. Many people think [問30] that ranking will keep rising, to third or fourth place within 20 years.

India has several key advantages. First, it has a large and young population. So the country has no problem finding workers for any job. Second, India has an excellent service sector. In areas like software and communications, it's getting stronger year after year. Third, English is one of the country's national languages. That's a big help when doing business overseas.

However, India is also dealing with serious problems. About 22% of its citizens are poor. Plus, a lot needs to be done to improve education and healthcare. These problems are especially serious in rural areas.

Over the next few decades, India will have to come up with answers to these problems. If it can, we will definitely hear more positive news about the country in the coming years.
