Kim Mitchell spends her weekends at an animal clinic. Hideki Hoshizaki spends one day a week at an orphanage. And Pedro Alarcon is spending a year abroad training teachers in Cambodia. They are among the millions of people who volunteer their time for good causes.

Volunteering is about doing something to make the world a better place without receiving money for it. It can come in many forms. People can spend time with seniors at a retirement home. Animal lovers can care for stray dogs. To improve the environment, we all can help clean up beaches and parks.

It's easy to start volunteering. Websites list local and overseas opportunities. Some groups organize efforts on a large scale. In 2012, the United Nations' volunteer program signed up 6807 volunteers from 159 countries.

The work done by these generous time-givers has a big impact everywhere. Many needy people and groups cannot afford to hire help, so they count on volunteers. For example, it is estimated that yearly volunteer work could be valued at around $600 million in Singapore.

There is a worldwide army of volunteers giving their time. In the USA, around one in four people is a regular volunteer. Through their experiences, volunteers learn new skills. They also make new friends and form strong ties with their communities.
